Praise for District Riflemen. The New York Times, in speaking of the known distance firing Tuesday, when the District riflemen came out ahead, says:
The shooting today was for the New Jersey National Guard match and the Intersey National Guard match and the Inter-state Regimental Team match. The teams consisted of six from each regiment, the distances 200 and 500 yards. During the morning there was a 12 o'clock blowing straight from the ocean down the range. In the afternoon at the 500 range it varied from 1 to 3 o'clock with puffs, which had the effect of knocking down the scores, the best marksmen being puzzled by the the effect of knocking down the scores, the best marksmen being puzzled by it.

Today's shooting indicates that with all the disadvantages that attended their organization and for their dependence upon Congress for appropriations and for maintenance, the District of Columbia National Guard is the best-organized rifle team corps of any state in the Union. No state is so generous as New Jersey in providing for the development and maintenance of rifle prac-tice, but the District of Columbia's three teams today easily distanced the four teams teams today easily distanced the four teams of New Jersey. The success of the Wash-Ingtonians may be due in a large measure to the energy and indefatigability of Gen. Ordway's inspector of fifie practice, Major George H. Harries, who excited the admiration at camp by marching his marksmen twice a day in regular order from head-guarters to the range.

twice a day in regular order from head-quarters to the range.

It seemed to be an appropriate visitation, when, at the close of the day's shoot, the telephone announced that Brig. Gen. Albert Ordway, commander-in-chief of the District of Columbia National Guard, had arrived in camp. Major Harries at once formed the team in front of headquarters, only to be disappointed when Gen. Ordway drove up and informally reviewed his troops.

Tonight the District of Columbia men are jubilant. They boast that the great states of New York and Pennsylvania, that annually expend $900.00 to their $19,000, fear to meet them in a rifle tourney. They declare that New York and Pennsylvania exhaust all their substance in meretricious pomp. Il their substance in meretricious pomp.
